Conclusion

Writing a ChatGPT prompt is more than just asking a one-sentence question. It often involves providing relevant background information to set the context of the query.

Let's say that you want to prepare for a marathon. You could ask ChatGPT:

How can I prepare for a marathon?

But you'll get a far more nuanced question if, instead, you tell it that you're training for your first marathon. The answers you get will be more focused on your needs, as in:

I am a beginner runner and have never run a marathon before, but I want to complete one in six months. How can I prepare for a marathon?

Do you see how you're giving the AI much more information with which to provide you with a more focused and helpful answer? For the record, I do not run, dance, or jump. So this is merely an example. There's no way I'm going to run a marathon (unless I'm doing it with a V-Twin motor under my seat).

Part of what makes ChatGPT so compelling is you can ask it almost anything.

That said, keep in mind that it's designed to provide written answers. If you want a list of websites, you're better off talking to Google.

You can ask as many questions as you want (although it did once tell me I asked too many questions and suggested I come back later). Yes, in fact, it basically said, "Go away kid, you're bothering me." To be fair, after hours of questions, I probably was. This thing can be as, or more, addictive than watching puppy videos on YouTube.
